

IS THERE A PERSONAL GOD...?

Many have always believed there is. The belief in a personal God will always result in me fretting and stewing over a concern for my behavior. There is no God who's concerned about my behavior no matter how bad it may be. If there was a personal God he would certainly be wise enough to understand that any unfavorable behavior on my part will always ultimately correct me. There are Gods many. Some of them are benevolent and some are not.

If you get right down to it, all of creation is God. Some in this form and some in that, but It's all God! There's nothing that's not God! There is no personal God but there is obviously the Source from which all things derived, but there is no one "Special Form"...no supreme God that is to be worshipped above any other. It doesn't exist. This is an opinion and one that's controversial in nature I realize. It's my own personal opinion; however I do not stand alone on this one.

The belief in a personal God is disempowering. If I am a Christian and I believe in God as separate and apart from me, a typical scenario is that I live in the experience of Romans chapter seven. There are light beings far advanced in knowledge who've evolved far ahead of me and you, but they are no more God than you or me. And they would be the first to tell you so.

The divine mind knows that it doesn't matter what I believe about anything in terms of my journey. We all are on the same journey into light. Some are way ahead of me, some are far behind me, and some are pretty much where I am on the journey. The closer I get to any real maturity, the more I'm free to accept you regardless of who or what you believed God to be. In terms of spirituality, if I am a child, because of fear I will tend to close off to all but those who support my personal convictions concerning God.

The mature know of no special or unique entity that is in the form of Source energy we know as God. There is one entity that appears as creation. Source energy, that mind/consciousness which is God would desire that all men know that it is manifesting and appearing as you, me, and all of creation. The divine will is that I see all creation as the One that I am. The divine mind knows that I cannot love all creation until the truth comes home to me, which is that God is all things, and is in all things, and is the appearing of all things.

This knowledge when coming to me brings with it a holy awesome reverence and respect for all forms of life from the very lowest to the very highest. It brings with it the solemn worship of the whole creation leaving nothing and no one out of the equation. This knowledge which is hidden from the human mind comes to me as the Christ mind is formed in me. This knowledge that speaks of only one in existence is that which came forth in every master that has appeared on the earth. It will ultimately reveal itself to all men.
