

THE DIVINE VARIETY...

As I understand it, the shepherd that is deep within all of us leads us in many different ways. All souls are unique in that no two are ever exactly alike. Each of us I see as uniquely different and no two of us have had the exact same experience in life. What I see, what any experience brings me will be seen and will be interpreted by me somewhat different than someone else having the same experience.

I do not believe that any of us will ever glean the same exact vibrations from any outward experience, nor do I believe we're supposed to. When ever I post anything here, I often try to make it clear that what I see and what I share works for me. I shy away from any attempt to convince anyone to see things exactly as I do. In scripture somewhere the master spoke of binding the strong man.

When I ever so slightly suggest that what I share is the way it is, I do not bind the strong man I only tend to awaken him. I see the ego as the strong man. Also... in Song of Solomon there is a verse where the king says... "Please do not stir nor awake my love till she please". Speaking in spiritual terms, we all sleep. Some are in a deep sleep while others are beginning to stir.

I take this verse as the spirit telling me to let those that sleep, sleep on. They will awaken all in good time. "To everything there is a season". Nothing but nothing is now or ever will be lost, for this creative energy intelligence cannot lose any part of itself. Every single thing that has been created or ever will be created came forth from the One and therefore a vital part of the one.

Everything that my ego sees as a problem in Gods creation of himself, all of it has a definite purpose and is beneficial to the whole. There can be unity in multiplicity. In fact I see God as desiring variety, for it's in this divine variety that the fullness of God is expressed. I believe that it's obviously the will of God that every one of his members be different.

That is I believe why he created us as he has. Just as the rose is different from the orchid, so is each of us. There are no two roses exactly alike just as there are no two souls exactly alike. From the moment we are born and even before our surroundings began to shape us. All through our young years and beyond, circumstances shape us.

In terms of peace on earth, I receive the idea that Love is the goal for me, and I see Love as all inclusive and excludes no one but embraces all of its creation. When this Love at last possesses me, I will see only myself appearing as the all of creation. I do not claim to be there, but I with all of you reach for the finish line.
