

THERE'S ONLY GOOD NEWS. . .

The fact that I keep "dying" and reincarnating is to me indisputable proof that the one we call God is in process. Unless that is. . . that I believe that there could be anything that exists that is not some form of God. To believe one thing in creation is not God is of course "duality thinking." This. . . by the way is also God. Nothing that the mind can conceive is anything other than the one that created it all; regardless of the form it takes. Whether we call it "good" or "evil," it still remains true that God appears as all things.

Consciousness is God and so you could say that the consciousness that is in "error" is God gone "prodigal." If in my mind, there is anything, any thought, any action etc. that is not God in some way, then I am a soul that remains apart of the mind that's gone prodigal, a mind that still is in need of "healing." Even words such as "healing" denotes "duality," for the "divine" mind sees nothing in need of "healing," for God is not "sick," but in process. This process is God becoming more, and this is the only purpose of "duality." For those of us who remain in duality this is a hard saying.

To those of us still dreaming what I have written thus far would be blasphemous. There are apparently {in terms of humanity,} two minds in existence. The mind of man and the mind of God. However as someone has said, there is only one mind and what man refers to as the human mind is simply the use he makes of the one. So consciousness is one as is everything else. A consciousness that commits serious crimes is the same consciousness {in essence} that the Master displayed as he went about healing all manner of diseases.

The only difference is one functioned in enlightenment, {Love} the other out of the hell it creates due to its lack of enlightenment. Any one of us could have been the "bad guy" in a past incarnation, and according to some who we consider to be in an enlightened state would say that the fact that we have come to where we are in this incarnation pretty much indicates that we have been there and done that and some of the worst. I am not in any way excusing lawlessness in the least. What I have written here is my perspective in the bigger scheme of things.

Many have said that things are not what they seem. I for one and I am sure you all agree that this is certainly so. There is and has always been no bad news in the truth. We could substitute the word "Truth" for "Gospel" because at the end of the day when the fat lady has sang the last bars of her song these two are in reality one and the same. You could say that what we normally consider the gospel of Jesus Christ is the method that spirit uses that can ultimately bring man into a more enlightened consciousness, the consciousness that ultimately becomes Love personified.

Often I am reminded of a line I have read in the book "Hinds Feet in High Places." The line is. . . "It is so happy to love" If I am somehow able to stand on the mountain top in/of consciousness, I can almost see the end product of this processed God, the consciousness of all created existence where/when God has become far more the HE/WE were at the first dawn of creation as we know it. I have at rare moments stood on that mountaintop, which is that land without words and marveled at the process of creation. God just keeps recreating and recycling itself into greater and greater expression.

Contrary to popular opinion in this text. . . it is about us! This "us" and source energy is all included in the One. I am that source of all that exists, and this is the everlasting gospel and true of all men. In truth, THERE IS ONLY GOOD NEWS!
